Hey Cavs fan....You wanna talk about LeBron and Frustration? Then I need to introduce you to a convicted felon. 39 year old Jason Goudlock has served nearly 21 years for aggravated robbery, he's approaching his fifth time before the Parole Board, and he says they should let him out of the slammer because LeBron's about to bring Cleveland a banner. "I would truly like to witness in person LeBron James' pursuit of an NBA championship for my beloved hometown."

I'll give Goudlock this- he comes at it differently. Most felons will stand there and mumble how they're a changed man. Goudlock's like- I'll be real- I'm a huge fan. I want to contribute to society and keep my nose clean and all that stuff... but more importantly, I need to be there for Cavs – Bulls in the playoffs. Watching it during my 60 minutes in the rec room isn't enough. I want to be right under Bron Bron's chalk toss.

The problem is- the whole point of prison is to DEPRIVE you of things you'd like to do. I'm sure there are felons in Kansas City who would just love to get to the ALCS this weekend, but unfortunately they stabbed somebody a few years back. Lots of luck Goudluck. But you've been in prison for 21 years, all of Cleveland has been in sports prison for 50 years.

If you want to be there for when LeBron breaks that drought, you're going to have to shovel your way out.
