

Parole-Seeking LeBron Fan Releases Book

 For Immediate Release ***

November 14, 2014

Ohio inmate Jason Goudlock, a 39-year-old native of Cleveland, who has served nearly 21 years as a first time offender for aggravated assault and armed robbery, has published Brother of the Struggle, a novel that captures the human cost of mass incarceration. Goudlock recently made national headlines after asking in a September letter to the Ohio Parole Board that he be released from his indefinite sentence of six to 25 years so he could "witness in person LeBron James' pursuit of an NBA championship for [his] beloved hometown team," the Cleveland Cavaliers. Goudlock became a published author on November 11, 2014, when Brother of the Struggle was made available to the public as an Amazon Kindle book.

Goudlock's novel is described on Amazon Kindle as an intimate, powerful story of one young African-American male's "effort to break the chain-like bonds of mass incarceration." Ironically, Brother of the Struggle arrives on the heels of the Ohio Parole Board's controversial decision to issue Goudlock a draconian sentence continuation of 60 months, which critics of Ohio's Parole Board claim was unjust and unwarranted.

Dr. William Nichols, who earlier this year, published an article about Goudlock in the Huffington Post, said, "The Parole Board made this judgment in the face of evidence that Goudlock has been rehabilitated."

Given the very low recidivism rates for ex-convicts who are published authors, it is likely Jason Goudlock has indeed been rehabilitated. He has announced his intention to offer copies of Brother of the Struggle to LeBron James and Brittney Griner.
